Economy concerns stop rally

By DAVID K. RANDALL

NEW YORK — Leave it to the economy to stop a debt-deal rally.

The Dow Jones industrial average started the day up nearly 140 points after President Barack Obama and congressional leaders said Sunday a deal had been reached to raise the nation's borrowing limit and avoid a debt default.

But another sign the economy has slowed erased those early gains and took the Dow down as many as 145 points by midday.

The Dow ended the day with a loss of 10.75 points. It was the seventh day of declines for the blue-chip index.

Many investors remained concerned about the direction of the economy. A report from the Institute of Supply Management said that U.S. manufacturing barely grew last month. And on Friday, the government said that so far this year the economy has grown at its slowest pace since the recession ended in June 2009.
